The Routledge International Handbook of Islamophobia

Edited by Irene Zempi and Imran Awan
Islamophobic hate crimes have increased significantly following the terrorist attacks of 9/11 and 7/7. More recently, the rhetoric surrounding Trump’s election and presidency, Brexit, the rise of far-right groups and ISIS-inspired terrorist attacks worldwide have promoted a climate where Islamophobia and anti-Muslim sentiments have become ‘legitimised’.

The Routledge International Handbook of Islamophobia provides a comprehensive single-volume collection of key readings in Islamophobia. Consisting of 32 chapters accessibly written by scholars, policy makers and practitioners, it seeks to examine the nature, extent, implications of, and responses to Islamophobic hate crime both nationally and internationally.

This volume will appeal to undergraduate and postgraduate students as well as postdoctoral researchers interested in fields such as Criminology, Victimology, Sociology, Social Policy, Religious Studies, Law and related Social Sciences subjects. It will also appeal to scholars, policy makers and practitioners working in and around the areas of Islamophobic hate crimes.

Irene Zempi is a Lecturer in Criminology at Nottingham Trent University, UK.

Imran Awan is a Professor of Criminology and Deputy Director of the Centre for Applied Criminology at Birmingham City University, UK.
Contents

Notes on contributors ix

Introduction 1

Irene Zempi and Imran Awan

PART I

Conceptualising Islamophobia 9

1. The debate over the utility and precision of the term “Islamophobia” 11
   Nathan C. Lean

2. Islamophobia as the racialisation of Muslims 18
   Nasar Meer and Tariq Modood

3. Islamophobia as the hidden hand of structural and cultural racism 32
   Tahir Abbas

4. A multidimensional model of understanding Islamophobia: a comparative practical analysis of the US, Canada, UK and France 42
   Saied Reza Ameli and Arzu Merali

5. Mapping and mainstreaming Islamophobia: between the illiberal and liberal 58
   Aurelien Mondon and Aaron Winter

6. The psychology of hate crime offenders who target Muslims: who could be a hate crime offender? 71
   Jane Prince

7. ‘Your pain is my pain’: examining the community impacts of Islamophobic hate crimes 84
   Jenny L. Paterson, Mark A. Walters and Rupert Brown
PART II
Patterns of Islamophobia through a European lens

8 A historical perspective: secularism, ‘white backlash’ and Islamophobia in France
   Olivier Esteves
   99
9 Islamophobia and the Left in France
   Timothy Peace
   110
10 The gendered dimension of Islamophobia in Belgium
    Amina Easat-Daas
    123
11 Islamophobia in Ireland: challenges from below?
    James Carr
    135
12 The racialised and Islamophobic framing of the Rotherham and Rochdale child sexual abuse scandals
    Waqas Tufail
    147
13 Discrimination against Muslims in Scotland
    Stefano Bonino
    161
14 Islamophobia and the Muslim student: disciplining the intellect
    Tania Saeed
    175
15 Islamophobia in UK universities
    Hareem Ghani and Ilyas Nagdee
    188
16 Islamophobia in Greece: the ‘Muslim threat’ and the panic about Islam
    Alexandros Sakellariou
    198
17 Religious dimension of Polish fears of Muslims and Islam
    Konrad Pędziwiatr
    212
18 Islamophobia and the quest for European identity in Poland
    Katarzyna Górak-Sosnowska and Marta Pachocka
    225

PART III
Patterns of Islamophobia through a global lens

19 Islamophobia and the US ideological infrastructure of white supremacy
    Louise Cainkar
    239
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Chapter</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Muslim American youth and post-9/11 Islamophobia: Interfaith activism and the limits of religious multiculturalism</td>
<td>252</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sunaina Maira</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21</td>
<td>Diasporas and dystopias on the beach: Burkini wars in France and Australia</td>
<td>263</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Shakira Hussein, Scheherazade Bloul and Scott Poynting</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>Breaking the peace: the Quebec City terrorist attack</td>
<td>275</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Barbara Perry</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23</td>
<td>Understanding Islamophobia in Southeast Asia</td>
<td>286</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mohamed Nawab Mohamed Osman</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24</td>
<td>Islamophobia in US education</td>
<td>298</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Shabana Mir and Loukia K. Sarroub</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Micro-level management of Islamophobia: negotiation, deflection and resistance</td>
<td>313</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Fatima Khan and Gabe Mythen</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26</td>
<td>Race, racism, Islamophobia in the media: journalists’ perceptions and Muslim responses</td>
<td>325</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Amir Saeed</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>Flying while Muslim: should we be concerned about Islamophobia at the airport?</td>
<td>340</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Leda Blackwood</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>28</td>
<td>Far-right Islamophobia: from ideology to ‘mainstreamed’ hate crimes</td>
<td>352</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Matthew Feldman and Paul Stocker</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>Islamophobia and the radical right in Europe: nostalgia or alternative utopia?</td>
<td>363</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Aristotle Kallis</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30</td>
<td>Terrorism, hate speech and ‘cumulative extremism’ on Facebook: a case study</td>
<td>374</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Mark Littler and Kathy Kondor</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Contents

31 The police challenges in responding to Islamophobic hate crime 385
   Paul Giannasi

32 Governmental responses to Islamophobia in the UK: a two-decade retrospective 397
   Chris Allen

Index 408
Notes on contributors

Tahir Abbas is an Assistant Professor of Security Studies at the Institute of Security and Global Affairs, Leiden University, The Hague, Netherlands.

Chris Allen is an Associate Professor of Hate Studies at the University of Leicester, UK.

Saied Reza Ameli is a Professor of Communications and North American Studies at the University of Tehran, Iran.

Leda Blackwood is a Lecturer in Psychology at the University of Bath, UK.

Scheherazade Bloul is a PhD Candidate at Deakin University, Australia.

Stefano Bonino is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow at eCrime, University of Trento, Italy.

Rupert Brown is a Professor of Social Psychology at Sussex University, UK.

Louise Cainkar is an Associate Professor of Social Welfare and Justice at Marquette University in Milwaukee, US.

James Carr is a Lecturer in Sociology at the University of Limerick, Ireland.

Amina Easat-Daas is a Project Officer at the University of Leeds, UK.

Olivier Esteves is an Assistant Professor in British studies at Lille University, France.

Matthew Feldman is the Director of the Centre for Analysis of the Radical Right, UK.

Hareem Ghani was the National Union of Students Women’s Officer, UK between 2016–2018.

Paul Giannasi is the Cross-Government Hate Crime Programme Manager, UK.

Katarzyna Górk-Sosnowska is an Associate Professor at Warsaw School of Economics, Poland.

Shakira Hussein is a Researcher at the National Centre for Excellence in Islamic Studies, University of Melbourne, Australia.
Notes on contributors

Aristotle Kallis is a Professor of History at Keele University, UK.

Fatima Khan is a Lecturer in Criminology at Manchester Metropolitan University, UK.

Kathy Kondor is a Researcher at the University of Huddersfield, UK.

Nathan C. Lean is a writer, researcher, and public speaker whose work focuses on Islam, Islamophobia, the Middle East, and Muslim–Christian relations.

Mark Littler is a Senior Lecturer in Criminology and Policing at the University of Huddersfield, UK.

Sunaina Maira is a Professor of Asian American Studies at University of California, US.

Nasar Meer is Professor of Race, Identity and Citizenship at the University of Edinburgh, UK.

Arzu Merali is Head of Research at the Islamic Human Rights Commission, UK.

Shabana Mir is an Associate Professor of Anthropology at American Islamic College, Chicago, US.

Tariq Modood is a Professor of Sociology, Politics and Public Policy at the University of Bristol, UK.

Aurelien Mondon is a Lecturer in French Studies at the University of Bath, UK.

Gabe Mythen is a Professor in Sociology at the University of Liverpool, UK.

Ilyas Nagdee is the National Union of Students Black Students’ Officer, UK.

Mohamed Nawab Mohamed Osman is an Assistant Professor and Coordinator of Malaysia Program/Seminar Series on Muslim Societies in Asia at the Nanyang Technological University, Singapore.

Marta Pachocka is an Assistant Professor at the Warsaw School of Economics, Poland.

Jenny L. Paterson is a Senior Lecturer in Psychology at Teesside University, UK.

Timothy Peace is a Lord Kelvin Adam Smith Fellow at the University of Glasgow, UK.

Konrad Pędziwiatr is an Assistant Professor at Cracow University of Economics, Poland.

Barbara Perry is a Professor of Criminology at the University of Ontario, Canada.

Scott Poynting is an Adjunct Professor at the Queensland University of Technology, Australia.

Jane Prince is a Principal Lecturer in Psychology at the University of South Wales, UK.
Amir Saeed is a Senior Lecturer in Media Studies at the University of Huddersfield, UK.

Tania Saeed is an Assistant Professor at Lahore University of Management Sciences (LUMS), Pakistan.

Alexandros Sakellariou is a Lecturer in Sociology at Hellenic Open University, Greece.

Loukia K. Sarroub is a Professor at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, US.

Paul Stocker is a Teacher of History at Chelsea Independent College, UK.

Waqas Tufail is a Senior Lecturer in Criminology at Leeds Beckett University, UK

Mark A. Walters is a Professor of Criminal Law and Criminology at Sussex University, UK.

Aaron Winter is a Senior Lecturer in Criminology and Criminal Justice at the University of East London, UK.
Introduction

Irene Zempi and Imran Awan

Islamophobic hate crimes have increased significantly in the West following the terrorist attacks of 11 September 2001 (usually referred to as 9/11) in the US. As numerous commentators have argued in detail, since 9/11, a particular anxiety towards Muslim ‘others’ has led to suspicion and outright hostility towards Muslims in the West. Following the attacks on 7 July 2005 in the UK (usually referred to as 7/7) these anxieties intensified. Muslims in the UK faced significantly heightened levels of religious and racial hatred, manifested as hate crimes and incidents. More recently, the rhetoric surrounding Donald Trump’s election and presidency, Brexit, and the rise of far-right groups, both nationally and internationally, have promoted a climate where hate crime, and specifically Islamophobic hate crime, have become ‘legitimised’. Also, the rise in Islamophobic attacks following the recent ISIS-inspired terrorist attacks in the UK, France, Belgium and Germany means that it is now an opportune moment for us to turn our attentions to the ways in which this form of hate crime might be understood, measured and addressed at a national and international level.

The Routledge International Handbook of Islamophobia provides a comprehensive single-volume collection of key readings in Islamophobia. It consists of 32 chapters accessibly written by scholars, policy makers and practitioners, both established and up and coming. The fact that Islamophobic hate crime is now recognised as a growing social problem means that this type of hate crime is ripe for critical analysis. As such, this is an important and innovative collection that allows readers to understand this phenomenon. In particular, this book seeks to examine the nature, extent, implications of, and responses to Islamophobic hate crime both nationally and internationally. The book also seeks to examine policy responses and examine the effectiveness of policing this form of hate crime.

The book is divided into four parts. Part I provides chapters that seek to understand the nature and scope of Islamophobic hate crime. Leading national and international authors use philosophical, theological, sociological, psychological and criminological theories to explain how both the causes and consequences of Islamophobic hate should be understood, not just as a domestic issue but as a global phenomenon. Part II illustrates the dynamics of Islamophobic hate crime through the use of case examples in individual countries in the European context. Part III further illustrates the dynamics of Islamophobic hate crime in the US and in a global context. Finally, Part IV looks at ways in which Islamophobic hate crime can be addressed on the national and international stage. Chapters in this part examine the potential use of internet regulation and policing.

In Chapter 1, Nathan C. Lean outlines the debates over the utility and precision of the term ‘Islamophobia’. The chapter invokes historical and contemporary examples in order to critically evaluate these debates. The chapter makes the case that persistent efforts to dismantle Islamophobia only serve to exacerbate the problem. It is argued that efforts to dismantle Islamophobia facilitate consequences that target the Muslim community, rendering it susceptible to more hostility on account of a nameless phenomenon of prejudice.

In Chapter 2, Nasar Meer and Tariq Modood examine the racialisation of Muslims as a form of Islamophobia. They argue that the implications of sources of hostility towards Muslims are best understood through registers of race and racialisation, an argument that the authors have pioneered within the Islamophobia studies field. Specifically, the first part of the chapter explores the theoretical and normative issues raised by the entanglements between race and religion in relation to Muslims, while the second half of the chapter draws on interview data with journalists and opinion formers. The chapter provides four-fold reasons as to why there may be little sympathy for the notion that Muslim minorities are subject to racism by virtue of their real or perceived ‘Muslimness’.

In Chapter 3, Tahir Abbas discusses Islamophobia as the ‘hidden hand of structural and cultural racism’. This chapter outlines key areas where Islamophobia masks deeper structural concerns including education, employment, health and housing in Britain. The chapter provides an analysis of how elite actors use the biopolitical discourse of hyper-masculinity in order to construct a conflict narrative between far-right groups and ‘Muslim extremist’ groups in the UK context.

In Chapter 4, Saied Reza Ameli and Arzu Merali offer a typology of Islamophobia, and outline the Multidimensional Model of Understanding Islamophobia (MMUI), drawing on a secondary analysis of data related to Islamophobic behaviour against Muslims in the USA, Canada, UK and France. The MMUI model is discussed in relation to the Domination Hate Model of Intercultural Relations (DHMIR). The DHMIR Model demonstrates how an innocent citizen can turn into a hate crime offender. As the chapter points out, the DHMIR Model does not attempt to justify hate crime offending; rather, it draws attention to a complicated process in which the hate crime offender becomes a passive implementer.

In Chapter 5, Aurelien Mondon and Aaron Winter discuss the concepts of liberal and illiberal Islamophobia. They provide an overview of definitions of Islamophobia and debates in the field, and justify their use of the term Islamophobia over alternatives such as anti-Muslim racism. They also develop the two articulations of Islamophobia (that is, liberal and illiberal Islamophobia), which they propose are essential to providing a comprehensive picture of the current state of racism towards individuals perceived to be Muslim.

In Chapter 6, Jane Prince considers the psychology of hate crime offenders who target Muslims and raises the question of ‘who could be a hate crime offender?’ This chapter reviews the existing literature on the psychology of hate crime offenders, the implications of these for preventative and restorative interventions, and offers an analysis of the broader role of social groups in Islamophobic criminal behaviours. The difficulties of addressing and eliminating the causes of Islamophobic hate crime are also considered.

In Chapter 7, Jenny L. Paterson, Mark A. Walters and Rupert Brown examine the community impacts of Islamophobic hate crimes. Drawing on a large-scale survey, this chapter provides a quantitative examination of the indirect (community) impacts of hate crimes on members of UK Muslim communities. The study shows that the consequences of Islamophobic hate crime can be far-reaching. Islamophobic hate crimes not only traumatised direct victims but are likely to spread anxiety and anger throughout Muslim communities. Incidents are also likely to impact upon individuals’ community involvement and avoidant behaviours, while also damaging their confidence in the police, the Crown Prosecution Service, and the government in tackling Islamophobic hate crime.

In Chapter 8, Olivier Esteves offers a historical perspective of French secularism, and explains how French laïcité began to be redefined in the late 1980s in light of the events of The Satanic Verses and the first headscarf affair in France. The chapter shows how public constructions of Islamophobia in France were shaped by these events. The chapter draws on Roubaix’s national labour archives, which helps readers to understand the experiences of Muslims in the labour market in France. The chapter also draws on some excerpts from fieldwork with Muslim social workers, imams and local figures on how they perceive misunderstandings of Islam and Muslims within the French context.

In Chapter 9, Timothy Peace discusses Islamophobia and the left in France. This chapter outlines some of the reasons as to why there is a political consensus in France about a ‘Muslim problem’ that needs to be addressed. Indeed, the chapter notes that key reasons include the rise of neo-republicanism and attempts by politicians to appear tough on ‘visible’ difference and multiculturalism in the face of increasing support for the far-right Front National. The chapter also discusses how French Muslims themselves respond to this not just through forms of protest, but also in the courts. The chapter pays attention to the legal framework and the work of NGOS such as the Collective Against Islamophobia in France, which fight to have acts of Islamophobia recognised as hate crimes.

In Chapter 10, Amina Easat-Daas examines Islamophobia in Belgium. Specifically, the chapter outlines the underlying mechanisms of the gendered dimensions of Islamophobia in Belgium and demonstrates how historically-rooted narratives contribute to modern-day ‘othering’ of Muslim women in Belgium. It illustrates both the direct and indirect forms of Islamophobia experienced by Belgian Muslim women in light of the national face veil ban, and the recent controversies surrounding wearing the headscarf in the workplace. The chapter concludes with an overview of the ways of tackling gendered Islamophobia as led by self-identified Belgian Muslim women themselves.

In Chapter 11, James Carr draws on empirical evidence in order to examine Islamophobia in Ireland. In doing so, the chapter draws on two key studies. Study 1 provides statistical and qualitative insights into anti-Muslim racism in Ireland. Study 2, which was undertaken in partnership with two civil society organisations: the Immigrant Council of Ireland and the Open Society Foundations, also provides insights into experiences of anti-Muslim hostility and discrimination in Ireland. The chapter concludes with a section outlining how Muslim communities in Ireland feel this pernicious phenomenon can be challenged, namely, recognition; inclusion; support and protection.

In Chapter 12, Waqas Tufail discusses the racialised and Islamophobic framing of the Rotherham and Rochdale child sexual abuse scandals. It is argued that popular discourses about these scandals have been dominated by representations focusing on race, ethnicity and the dangerous masculinities of Muslim men. The chapter compares and contrasts the representations and discourses of racialised and non-racialised reporting of child sexual abuse and situates the grooming scandals in the context of anti-Muslim racism.

In Chapter 13, Stefano Bonino examines discrimination towards Muslims in Scotland. This chapter explores the realities and perceptions of ethno-religious discrimination among Muslims in Scotland with respect to their everyday social interactions with the indigenous Scottish community, contact with police and security officers. It traces the history of discrimination against ethnic minorities in Scotland and particularly focuses on the multifaceted manifestations of anti-Muslim sentiments within a post-9/11 global climate of distrust towards Islam.
It concludes by arguing that the overall life experiences of Muslims in Scotland are more positive than those of their fellow correligionists in England due to a number of political, social and cultural factors.

In Chapter 14, Tania Saeed considers how educational institutions, including universities, have been implicated in a counter-terrorism agenda, under the Counter-Terrorism and Security Act 2015, that has placed a ‘statutory’ responsibility on such institutions to report on students perceived to be vulnerable to radicalisation. To this end, the chapter examines how Islamophobia disciplines the Muslim body and mind, where Muslim students are increasingly conscious of their speech and behaviour, engaging in self-censorship. Drawing on a narrative study of 40 Muslim female university students conducted in 2010–2012, and recent reports of Islamophobia in educational institutions, this chapter illustrates how such self-regulation makes Islamophobia more dangerous, where Muslim students are constantly under pressure to appear ‘normal’ and not be misunderstood.

In Chapter 15, Hareem Ghani and Ilyas Nagdee discuss Islamophobia in Higher Education drawing on the findings from the research report entitled The Experience of Muslim Students in 2017–18, published by the National Union of Students. This comprehensive piece of work captures Muslim students’ and sabbatical officers’ experiences in colleges and universities throughout the UK. The findings demonstrate that experiences of hate-motivated incidents and crimes are widespread, yet under-reported.

In Chapter 16, Alexandros Sakellariou discusses Islamophobia in Greece. Specifically, this chapter examines the main channels through which Islamophobia and anti-Muslim attitudes are being re-produced in the Greek context. In this respect, the chapter also outlines the reasons for Islamophobia in Greece. It also considers whether the recent refugee crisis has influenced the rise of anti-Muslim and Islamophobic attitudes. Drawing on the concepts of moral panics and politics of fear, this chapter argues that Islamophobia has serious implications for religious freedom and equality within the Greek society.

In Chapter 17, Konrad Pędziwiatr examines the religious dimension of Islamophobia in Poland. Specifically, this chapter demonstrates that the processes of Muslim ‘Othering’ have been closely linked in Poland with wider socio-political transformations in Polish society. In Chapter 18, Katarzyna Górk-Sosnowska and Marta Pachocka also examine Islamophobia in Poland but from a different perspective, that of Poland’s membership in the EU.

In Chapter 19, Louise Cainkar examines Islamophobia in the US. Specifically, this chapter discusses how Islamophobia is increasingly being treated as a form of racism in scholarship on its ideological and structural patterns in the West. The chapter argues that anti-Muslim actions are ideologically supported through claims that American values are superior to those of Muslims, fabricated claims of an inherent global Muslim hatred of Americans, and persistent suggestions that Muslims are morally inferior human beings. Rising hate crimes and recent government policies provide strong evidence that Islamophobia has reached new heights in the United States on both ideological and structural levels.

In Chapter 20, Sunaina Maira outlines the ways interfaith activism is produced as a response to Islamophobia and the limits of religious multiculturalism. Drawing on an ethnographic study, conducted in Silicon Valley in northern California between 2007 and 2011, in the South Bay Area and in the nearby cities of Fremont/Hayward that have a large Afghan population, the study explores the political subject-hood of young people targeted in the War on Terror and in the context of neoliberal multiculturalism. The larger project focuses on how these youth turned to rights – especially civil rights and human rights – to respond to Islamophobia, racism, and the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq, and how they simultaneously grappled with the limits of rights-based activism.
In Chapter 21, Shakira Hussein, Scheherazade Bloul and Scott Poynting discuss the issue of the burkini affair in France and Australia. It is argued that continental Europe provides a dystopia for Australian Muslims and Islamophobes alike. The chapter also discusses how the far-right and anti-Muslim populists of both nations blame the accommodation of cultural diversity and the entry of ‘too many Muslims’ for purported corrosion of the national culture.

In Chapter 22, Barbara Perry examines Islamophobia in Canada. Specifically, the chapter describes xenophobia and racism, in an era of Donald Trump and far-right French politician Marine Le Pen. The chapter unpacks the ways in which global and ‘home-grown’ xenophobia and anti-Muslim hatred coalesced to provide the climate for elevated rates of anti-Muslim violence. It shows how Trump’s campaign rhetoric and subsequent policy directives have provided one level of influence. It also considers the ways in which conservative politics at the national level in Canada and provincial level in Quebec have provided fertile ground for xenophobia and Islamophobia to take root there. The manifestations of culturally embedded Islamophobia are revealed in consistently negative polling around Islam, and high – and increasing – rates of anti-Muslim hate crime.

In Chapter 23, Mohamed Nawab Mohamed Osman examines Islamophobia in Southeast Asia. Specifically, this chapter argues that Islamophobia in Thailand and Philippines is rooted in Muslim insurgencies, which could be traced to an early colonial policy. First, the chapter examines the current literature on Islamophobia and proposes a conceptual framework from which Islamophobia in the Asian contexts can be understood. Second, the chapter analyses the historical factors for the rise of Islamophobia and the contemporary manifestations of Islamophobia in these societies. Third, the chapter examines the impact of this analysis as a framework in understanding Islamophobia in conflictual areas. It is concluded that the challenge of Islamophobia in both Thailand and Philippines is likely to continue to grow especially in light of the growth of Islamophobia internationally.

In Chapter 24, Shabana Mir and Loukia Sarroub examine Islamophobia in US education. In the first part of the chapter they explain how ‘Islamophobia’ has become a social fact of school life for many young people in US public schools. They then present an analysis of the Islamophobia as politically situated in higher education settings. Throughout the chapter, they highlight the ways in which Islamophobia is manifested in US education, the multi-layered damage that this inflicts on educational participants, and the strategies that generate hope for fighting Islamophobia and racism.

In Chapter 25, Fatima Khan and Gabe Mythen discuss micro-level management of Islamophobia. This chapter addresses the issue of anti-Muslim victimisation and the intensification of an Islamophobic climate in Britain over the last two decades. Drawing on an empirical study conducted in the northwest of England, this chapter elucidates the multiple ways in which British Muslim identities are negotiated and managed in environments in which their beliefs, values and aspirations are routinely questioned. This chapter also examines how micro level strategies of interactional negotiation allow participants to benefit from hybridity, circumvent potentially risky interactions and resist stereotyping and misperceptions.

In Chapter 26, Amir Saeed discusses Muslim responses to Islamophobia in the media. The paper presents empirical evidence from media educators in the UK that implies journalists do not deliberately write racist material. However, it is suggested that this argument does not account for the cultural and ideological factors that influence media coverage of Islam that also echoes how the Western media have routinely represented non-white minority groups historically. The chapter argues that journalists must acknowledge the influence of ‘hidden agendas’ that impact on their reporting of Islam and Muslims.

In Chapter 27, Leda Blackwood discusses Islamophobia at the airport drawing on research conducted with airport authorities and British Muslims as well as wider reportage of Muslim experiences. The chapter argues that the expression ‘flying while Muslim’ is now widely used to capture a set of intimidating and humiliating experiences Muslims report having when travelling in non-Muslim countries. The chapter presents a social psychological analysis of how airport authorities and Muslims themselves understand the nature of Muslims experiences of Islamophobia in the airport; and the consequences for Muslim-authority relations both inside the airport and beyond.

In Chapter 28, Matthew Feldman and Paul Stocker examine the nature of anti-Muslim prejudice by different far-right groups, before turning to the issue of their manifestation as hate attacks. The chapter outlines the diverse nature in which ‘Islamoprejudice’ is presented by the far-right, including both conspiratorial anti-Muslim prejudice and the linking of Islam with terrorism. Drawing on the Tell MAMA data, this chapter argues that rather than being mere ‘rhetoric’, far-right Islamophobia has been an important factor in the rise of new forms of far-right extremism.

In Chapter 29, Aristotle Kallis examines the relationship between Islamophobia and the radical right in Europe, and considers whether this is nationalist nostalgia or transnational anti-utopia. The chapter argues that Islamophobia has functioned as a powerful node of a wider call to radical action that is both anti-utopian (averting a perceived unfolding catastrophe by projecting as a warning an extreme version of the present) and utopian in its own right (unlocking an alternative actionable blueprint and path to a better future). Therefore, the chapter makes for the point that, in order to understand the dynamics of the radical right’s embrace of Islamophobia, ‘utopia’ is a far more accurate and useful conceptual category than regressive nostalgia for a mono-cultural, territorially rooted, and politically inward-looking alternative vision.

In Chapter 30, Mark Littler and Kathy Kondor discuss terrorism, hate speech and ‘cumulative extremism’ on Facebook. Drawing on the results of analyses conducted using social media data from both the English Defence League and Britain First in the period immediately before and after the terrorist attacks in Paris in November 2015, the chapter examines how far orthodox cumulative extremism theory can be applied to the online space. The findings show that rather than magnifying extremist attitudes and triggering calls to action that result in online attacks, there is comparably little evidence of a change in activity in the posts of either group following the terror attacks. This challenges the ideas of orthodox cumulative extremism theory, suggesting that the perceived threat of radical Islam will not automatically mobilise right wing extremist groups. The reasons for this are discussed, alongside the possible policy implications this may have.

In Chapter 31, Paul Giannasi outlines police challenges in responding to Islamophobic hate crime. The chapter explores the nature of contemporary hostility towards Muslims and the unique challenges of meeting the needs of Muslim victims, including the conflation of race and religious identities in the minds of perpetrators, the issue of intra-group hostilities and the task of building the confidence of victims to come forward to report their attacks. The chapter outlines some of the key policy and legislative developments and explores the progress made by criminal justice organisations.

In Chapter 32, Chris Allen considers governmental responses to Islamophobia in the UK. As the chapter notes, it is just over two decades since Islamophobia was afforded political recognition in the UK, prompted by the publication of the 1997 Runnymede Trust report on behalf of the Commission on British Muslims and Islamophobia. In light of this, the chapter reflects on the past two decades in the UK to consider how successive British governments have responded to Islamophobia since the publication of the CBMI report in 1997. Beginning with a short overview that affords some context about the issue of religious-based discrimination in the UK, it proceeds by first considering the New Labour government of 1997–2010, before then considering the Conservative-led Coalition and Conservative governments from 2010 through to 2017. In conclusion, some comparisons between the different approaches are provided.

Definition of Islamophobia

We welcome the definition of Islamophobia released in November 2018 by the All Party Parliamentary Group on British Muslims following its year-long consultation across the UK:

> Islamophobia is rooted in racism and is a type of racism that targets expressions of Muslimness or perceived Muslimness.

(All Party Parliamentary Group on British Muslims 2018, p. 11)

We are pleased the definition fits with our own definition, which is based on Islamophobia as a form of racism and perceived Muslim identities.

Reference

Introduction

The debate over the utility and precision of the term Islamophobia

Islamophobia as the racialisation of Muslims

Islamophobia as the hidden hand of structural and cultural racism

A multidimensional model of understanding Islamophobia

Ameli, S. R. 2010. Domination Hate Model of Intercultural Relations (DHMIR). Public speech in the Faculty of World Studies at the University of Tehran.

Mapping and mainstreaming Islamophobia

The psychology of hate crime offenders who target Muslims

□□□Your pain is my pain□□□

A historical perspective

Centre Historique Minier (town of Lewarde, Nord), collection HL 1383 (C2100), file titled Administration du personnel, ouvriers nord-africains, notes diverses (1947-1970).

Islamophobia and the Left in France

Bale, T. et al. 2010. If you can’t beat them, join them? Explaining social democratic responses to the challenge from the populist radical right in Western Europe. Political Studies, 58(3), 410-426.

The gendered dimension of Islamophobia in Belgium

Islamophobia in Ireland

The racialised and Islamophobic framing of the Rotherham and Rochdale child sexual abuse scandals

Awan, I. and Zempi, I. 2016. The affinity between online and offline anti-Muslim hate crime: dynamics and impacts. Aggression And Violent Behavior, 27, 18

Discrimination against Muslims in Scotland

Islamophobia and the Muslim student

Siddiqui, A. 2007. Islam at universities in England: meeting the needs and investing in the future. Islamic Studies, 46(4), 559-570.

Islamophobia in UK universities

Islamophobia in Greece

Religious dimension of Polish fears of Muslims and Islam

Islamophobia and the quest for European identity in Poland

CBOS. 2017. Komunikat z badań CBOS stosunek do przyjmowania uchodźców. No. 163/2017. 18 December. CBOS.

Islamophobia and the US ideological infrastructure of white supremacy

Feffer, J. 2012. Islamophobia and the 2010 Election: Though Obama’s Policies on Islam and the Middle East Differ Little from his Republican Challengers, the Right Still Claims He is Pro-Islamic. Mother Jones, 29 March.251

Levin, B. 2017. Responses to the Increase in Religious Hate Crimes. Statement of Prof. Brian H Levin to the United States Senate, Committee on the Judiciary, 7 May.

Muslim American youth and post-9/11 Islamophobia

Diasporas and dystopias on the beach

Breaking the peace

Amiraux, V. and Araya-Moreno, J. 2014. Pluralism and radicalization: mind the gap! In P. Bramadat and L. Dawson (eds), Religious Radicalization and Securitization in Canada and Beyond (pp. 92-120). Toronto: University of Toronto Press.

Bakali, N. 2015. Contextualising the Quebec Charter of Values: how the Muslim Other is conceptualised in Quebec. Culture and Religion, 16(4), 412-429.

Understanding Islamophobia in Southeast Asia

Arosoaie, A. 2018. Understanding the creation and radicalisation of the Students Islamic Movement of India (SIMI) and the Indian Mujahideen (IM), South Asia. Journal of South Asian Studies.

Islamophobia in US education

Micro-level management of Islamophobia

Ansari, H. and Hafez, F. 2012. From the Far Right to the Mainstream. Frankfurt am Main: Campus.

Yihaz, F. 2012. Right-wing hegemony and immigration: how the populist far-right achieved hegemony through the immigration debate in Europe. Current Sociology, 60(3), 368-381.

Race, racism, Islamophobia in the media

Awan, I. 2014. Islamophobia and Twitter: a typology of online hate against Muslims on social media. Policy & Internet, 6(2), 133–156.

Grimm, J. 2015. #We Are Not Charlie. SW Comments, 12 (February).

Clarion Press.
Sociology Compass, 1(2), 443-462.
Saeed, A. 2011. 9/11 and the increase in racism and Islamophobia: a personal reflection. Radical History Review, 111, 210ff.
and Irish Studies, 1(1), 15ff.
Chilton (eds), A New Agenda in (Critical) Discourse Analysis. Amsterdam: John Benjamins, pp. 7ff.
Assembly. Retrieved from www.washingtonpost.com/politics/full-text-of-president-obamas-2014-address-to-

Flying while Muslim

Alam, Y. and Husband, C. 2013. Islamophobia, community cohesion and counter-terrorism policies in Britain.
Patterns of Prejudice, 47, 235ff.
print2.pdf.
Intelligence and Counter Terrorism, 7, 22ff.
Blackwood, L. M., Hopkins, N. and Reicher, S. D. 2012. Divided by a common language? In K. J. Jonas and
T. A. Morton (eds), Restoring Civil Societies: The Psychology of Intervention and Engagement Following
Blackwood, L., Hopkins, N. and Reicher, S. 2013a. I know who I am, but who do they think I am? Muslim Blackwood, L., Hopkins, N. and Reicher, S. 2013b. Turning the analytic gaze on us. European Psychologist, 18, 245ff.
Blackwood, L., Hopkins, N. and Reicher, S. D. 2015. Flying while Muslim: citizenship and misrecognition in Bland-Gitlin, I., Fenn, E., Masip, J. and Yoo, A. H. 2014. Cognitive-load approaches to detect deception:
searching for cognitive mechanisms. Trends in Cognitive Sciences, 18, 41ff.
Bonino, S. 2015. Visible Muslimness in Scotland: between discrimination and integration. Patterns of Prejudice, 49, 367ff.
Bradford, B., Jackson, J. and Stanko, E. A. 2009. Contact and confidence: revisiting the impact of public encounters with the police. Policing and Society, 19, 20ff.
Cherny, A. and Murphy, K. 2011. Understanding the contingency of procedural justice outcomes. Policing,
5, 22ff.
of Personality and Social Psychology, 89, 717ff.

Eurasian studies in the age of terrorism. BC Third World Law Journal, 30, 103.

Far-right Islamophobia

Islamophobia and the radical right in Europe

Allen 2010

Sarrazin, T. 2010. Deutschland schafft sich ab. Munich: DVA.

Terrorism, hate speech and cumulative extremism on Facebook

Sonning Common: Academic Conferences and Publishing International.

Awan, I. 2016. Islamophobia on Social Media: A Qualitative Analysis of the Facebook Walls of Hate. International Journal of Cyber Criminology, 10(1).

The police challenges in responding to Islamophobic hate crime

Governmental responses to Islamophobia in the UK

Allen, C. 2011c. We don’t do God!: a critical retrospective of New Labour’s approaches to religion or belief and faith and Culture and Religion, 12(3), 259-275.

Allen, C. 2013. Passing the dinner table test: retrospective and prospective approaches to tackling Islamophobia in Britain. SAGE Open, 3(2), 215.

McLoughlin, S. 2010. From race to faith relations, the local to the national level: the state and Muslim organisations in Britain. In A. Kreienbrink and M. Bodenstein (eds), Muslim Organisations and the State: European Perspectives, pp. 123-149. Nürnberg: Bundesamt für Migration und Fluchtlinge.

